

Mori Building Establishes Representative Office in Singapore Aims to Advance Real Estate Development in Southeast Asia

Tokyo, October 7, 2014 – Mori Building Co., Ltd., a leading Tokyo-based urban real estate developer, today announced the establishment of its representative office in Singapore, to further expand and strengthen the company's real estate investment, development and consultation businesses in Southeast Asia.

With the rapid urbanization and economic growth occurring in many Southeast Asian cities, there is a growing demand for high-quality buildings and urban development in the region. In light of this growth and need, Mori Building has established its Singapore Representative Office for research and marketing activities relating to real estate investment, development, and consulting in the region.

Beyond the company's presence in Japan marked by such notable developments as ARK Hills (1986), Roppongi Hills (2003), and the recently completed Toranomon Hills (2014) among others, Mori Building has also created top-quality facilities and urban developments, and conducted high quality property management and consulting elsewhere in Asia as demonstrated with the Senmao Building (1996) in Dalian, China, and the Hang Seng Bank Tower (1998) and Shanghai World Financial Center (2008), both in Shanghai, China. In 2013, Mori Building established its International Business Department to further expand the company's operations beyond Japan and China to emerging cities in Southeast Asia. The Mori Building Group already operates offices in Shanghai, Dalian, Seoul and Hong Kong.
